

Dear FCC Commissioners & Staff:

Hello, I am Alexander Cutadean and this letter is in regards to the FCC removing the law that forces telephone companies to allow consumers to have DSL access through separate ISP's.

I have had access to the internet with the same provider starting with dialup service when I was 16 years old. I am now 22 and run a small business and website from my home with the same provider. For the past seven years Iglou Internet Services has provided me with outstanding service in spite of my phone company giving me terrible service. Iglou has done everything in their power to make my DSL service the best it can be while verizon continually makes my job harder and harder with all their red tape and refusal to deal with me on a personal level. I'm am certain if this law is removed it will become nearly impossible for me to run my business the way I do right now. Verizon has proven time and time again they don't really care about my situation.

Sincerely,

Alexander Cutadean
